The City of Nedlands acknowledges the traditional custodians of this land, the Whadjuk people of the Noongar nation, and pays respect to the Elders both past and present.

Have you seen our public artwork Nesting Fields by Lorenna Grant?

Nesting Fields is an artwork that holds the dual function of art and wildlife protection. This artwork expands on an original concept to create a 'canopy' of sculptural Nesting Fields, with the intent to provide a location for threatened birdlife to nest.

Nesting Fields is located at the intersection of Servetus Street & Narla Road, Swanbourne.

Meet Carnaby the Cockatoo!

My Noongar name is Ngoolark and my scientific name is Zanda latirostris. I'm an endangered breed of a black cockatoo located in the Southwest WA.

I love to chew gumnuts and banksia seeds, and can live up to 60 years in the wild.

We have three watering stations in Nedlands', one in Hollywood Reserve, Shenton Bushland, and also in Allen Park. Unfortunately, our bushland continues to get cut down which means we have nowhere to live!

We need your help; can you make us a safe space in your backyard?

Was it me?

People get me confused all the time.

I will have brownish-black features all over with whitish-yellow features over the ears.

Males will have a blackish bill and pink skin around the eyes and females will have a greyish bill and grey skin around the eyes.

5 ways to help!

- Clear for Cockatoos! Leave space near roads so our flying friends can take off safely.
- Water Welcome! Keep fresh water out for thirsty birds and critters.
- If you find me or any of my friends injured take me to the vet!
- Volunteer at a black cockatoo rehabilitation centre.
- Plant Local! Choose plants that belong in your area — they're best for local wildlife.

My favourite foods are eucalyptus and banksia nuts!

Fun fact!

I'm as smart as an eight-year-old human!
