

Additional Information

My (then) young family and I migrated to Nedlands 37 years ago. My three daughters had their education at schools in the western suburbs, and graduated from the University of Western Australia. We have been part of the Nedlands community and environment for nearly four decades.

I graduated in engineering, went on a two-year working graduate fellowship to England, and returned as a Management Consultant in Malaysia. On migrating to Australia I switched to accounting and financial management, and worked mainly in the public sector. This diverse knowledge base and work environments enables me to engage and collaborate with people of different economic, educational and social backgrounds.

I have been a Rotarian for nearly two decades, doing service to help the needy, both in Australia and overseas. One area I am passionate about is positive ageing projects that assist both the elderly and the wider community. One of the advantages of voluntary community service is acquiring skills to motivate others to collaborate for common good of the community.

I value integrity, transparency and efficiency when spending public funds.
