City celebrates ‘Thank a Volunteer Day’ at breakfast

The City of Nedlands held an International Volunteer Thank You Breakfast at Adam Armstrong Pavilion on Saturday, December 5, to celebrate International Volunteer Day,

According to Mayor, Cilla de Lacy, the City has more than 500 volunteers involved in clubs and organisations associated with community wellbeing, education, sport and recreation, disability support, emergency services and environment projects.

“Our volunteers are much appreciated and their contribution towards making our community a more caring, inclusive and enjoyable place to live, is invaluable.”

Over 80 per cent of West Australians are involved in volunteer work and the financial value of that equates to more than $39 billion dollars to the WA economy every year.
