On a mission for Carrington Park vision

A strategic vision for Carrington Park is to be developed – and the City of Nedlands wants your input.

Located between Weld and Broome Streets on Carrington Street, Nedlands, the park's future use and development will be considered to ensure community needs are met in the most economical way possible.

The community is invited to drop into information sessions being held every half hour from 4pm to 6pm, 10 August, at the Hollywood-Subiaco Bowls Club to find out more.

City of Nedlands Mayor Max Hipkins said the project involved identifying and researching a range of topics, opportunities and issues relevant to Carrington Park.

“This involves looking at the natural and built environment, water quality and conservation, as well as accessibility, community use and ensuring the park is fit for purpose,” he said.

“The final vision will be presented as a concept plan with accompanying explanatory text.

“It will feature a range of initiatives to address existing and potential limitations so regular park users and residents are provided for now and into the future.

“Initiatives relate to park users and accessibility, landscaping and vegetation, furniture, shade provision, parking, infrastructure, dog exercise areas and outdoor recreational activities.”

Mayor Hipkins said the initiatives, once agreed upon, would be delivered over the long term.

“Assets that require renewal will be replaced in accordance with the strategic vision being developed,” he said.

“We understand the area caters for a range of uses, including dog exercise, casual recreation and children's playground needs.

“That's why we're encouraging people to learn more about the technical issues and share their thoughts as part of the consultation process.”
